A group of Lincoln's young professionals has recognized a great achievement.

Lincoln's Young Professionals Group (YPG) celebrated its five-year anniversary Jan. 20 at the Grand Manse. The event was created to reflect on the success of the largest Young Professionals Group in Nebraska.

Angelos Angelou was the first to identify the need for a group in his economic development strategy for Lincoln in 2003. The Lincoln Chamber of Commerce worked with several of its investors to launch the program. Gallup was one of the key initial corporate partners.

"There was an obvious need and we helped meet that need," said Wendy Birdsall, president of the Lincoln Chamber of Commerce.

The YPG has since grown to over 800 members as well as 1,900 contacts that receive information about the group. Following are projects in which the group has taken the lead:

- "Rocked the Vote" for the passage of the public vote that will create the new Pinnacle Bank Arena;
- Helped create a statewide young professionals network in partnership with the Omaha YPC and the Connecting Young Nebraskans organizations;
- Held events to benefit local philanthropic organizations;

YPG 5 turns

- Matched over 45 young professionals into volunteer leadership roles on various non-profit and philanthropic boards of directors; and
- Hosted over 200 membership events for networking, entrepreneurship, policy and professional development.

The Lincoln YPG was founded in 2007 to empower young professionals in Lincoln to create an energetic and dynamic environment for learning, networking and entrepreneurship. YPG's vision is to increase Lincoln's attractiveness by encouraging young professionals to take ownership in its future by engaging in the community professionally, personally and philanthropically.
